

Accessibility of childcare services for young children with disabilities:

Online questionnaire launch

Researchers from three Canadian universities (Université Laval, McMaster University and the University of British Columbia), as well as various community and parent partners, have joined forces to conduct a study which will lead to recommendations for improving the accessibility of childcare services in Canada for young children with disabilities.

What ?

An online questionnaire is being launched to document the main challenges encountered by families and workers, and to prioritize solutions that could be implemented to address these challenges.

Who can participate ?

- Parent of a young child with disabilities who attends a childcare service or has previously attended a childcare service (within the last 3 years)
- Parent of a young child with disabilities who is searching for a childcare service or has been unable to find a childcare service
- Worker in a childcare service providing or having provided services to a young child with disabilities (e.g., manager, childcare educator, special care counsellor)

How can I take part ?

Complete the online questionnaire here.

Share this initiative! Why? To inform the development of standards for high-quality and inclusive childcare services for OUR young children with disabilities.

Thank you so much for your invaluable collaboration!

